In the last two issues we have been looking at parish renewal and the part a pastoral planning process plays in the renewal of parishes (see issue 9-4 The Messy Work of Parish Renewal). http://tinyurl.com/ygd6s9j

In the last issue’s article (Year for Priests Today & Tomorrow) we started to share the predictions on the number of clergy that will be available for parish service into the foreseeable future and recognized that there will be a “gap” between the number of clergy required to staff the current number of parishes in the current way and the number of clergy who are expected to be available by 2025, 15 years from now.

According to projections of the Delaware Valley Regional Planning Commission, by 2020 there will be over 200,000 additional people in the archdiocese. Assuming that the share of the total population that is Catholic is maintained, the total number of Catholics will be up over 70,000 or 6% by 2020 as a result of growth primarily in Bucks, Chester and Montgomery counties.

While Catholics are up over 70,000 or 6%, diocesan priests in parish ministry can be expected to be down 96 or 26% (from the current number of 363) based on AON consulting actuarial study of 2005. But this will not be experienced the same way throughout the archdiocese. In some areas the population is growing while in others it is not. It is important to look at the number of Diocesan priests and the population change by geographic areas or parish cluster.

If no changes are made, between 2020 and 2025, the number of diocesan priests projected to be available for parish ministry dips below the number of parishes (245) currently staffed by diocesan priests. By 2025, we expect to have 227 priests in parish ministry. Before then, and this has already started, the clergy staff of larger parishes will need to be cut to levels that might require major adjustments to carry out the work of the parish.

There are several Strategies to address the “gap” between the number of priests that are projected to be needed in order to maintain the staffing levels and the number of priests projected to be available based on the latest actuarial study. These can be grouped into 4 general areas.

1. Obtain more active priests from within or outside the Archdiocese.
   Perhaps the most important work for all Catholic people is to pray for and promote priestly vocations. Vocations are formed first in the families, communities and parishes in which young men grow up. Encouraging vocations is everyone’s job. There are roles for family, friends, priests, parishes, schools and seminaries.

   Other ways to increase the number of priests include extending the active service of priests by asking priests to stay on in a senior priest status or other ways after their retirement or to recruit priests from other countries. But obtaining priests from other parts of the world is an issue of justice. North America has the best priest to parishioner ratio in the world: 1:1229 compared with South America at 1:7094. Priests from other countries may also introduce issues of culture and language that need to be addressed.

Silver scholars enjoy stress-free learning as auditors

WHAT’S HAPPENING

- Older Americans are heading back to school — not to earn degrees, but for the sheer joy of learning. Auditing college courses keeps aging minds nimble without the stress of exams and grades.

- As Boomers hit their retirement years, taking classes for fun instead of credits is on the rise. About 60% of U.S. colleges now offer auditing opportunities for silver scholars, who range from their early 60s to well into their 80s (Philadelphia Inquirer 11.11.09).

Seniors aren’t the only ones who benefit from intergenerational interaction. “[Auditors] ask great questions,” says Daniel Richter, a history professor at Penn. “And besides, they laugh at my jokes.” Continued on Page 5

Technology stakeholders’ and critics’ expectations of social, political and economic change by 2020, fielded by the Pew Research Center’s Internet & American Life Project:

» Google won’t make us stupid: 76% of these experts agreed with the statement, “By 2020, people’s use of the Internet has enhanced human intelligence; as people are allowed unprecedented access to more information they become smarter and make better choices. Nicholas Carr was wrong: Google does not make us stupid.”

» Reading, writing, and the rendering of knowledge will be improved: 65% agreed with the statement “by 2020 it will be clear that the Internet has enhanced and improved reading, writing and the rendering of knowledge.” Still, 32% of the respondents expressed concerns that by 2020 “it will be clear that the Internet has diminished and endangered reading, writing and the rendering of knowledge.”

» Innovation will continue to catch us by surprise: 80% of the experts agreed that the “hot gadgets and applications that will capture the imaginations of users in 2020 will often come ‘out of the blue.’”

Has Your Sunday Collection Dropped?

A $25-a-month phone bill or $300 annually was once the main telecommunications expense. By 2004, the average American spent $770.95 annually on services like cable TV, Internet and videogames, according to Census data. By 2008, it ballooned to $903. By the end of 2010, it is expected to jump another 10%, to $997.07.

What does this mean for parishes? If your parishioners are paying for these services, is your parish making good use of them to stay in touch?

The Age of Tweets

Recently I’ve noticed that anyone under thirty years of age will not answer a cell phone call, however if I text them, a reply returns within a few minutes. I don’t know why, myself, I’d rather talk but that’s just me and I’m old. Social networks? I don’t get that either.

I really like the TV commercial where the father Tweets that he’s sitting on his couch and his young son says “dad I know you’re on the couch and I don’t care”. The father just grins like he just broke some secret code. If that makes sense to you please e-mail me the explanation. (by the way I think e-mail might be getting obsolete) On the other hand, even though texting doesn’t make much sense to me, I can use it to reach younger generations. Now I’m trying to master the social networks so I can continue to communicate with younger people. I also believe our parishes need to understand these communications vehicles if we are to continue to be a voice to all ages. Our only job is to spread the Gospel. Unfortunately, most under-thirties don’t use the phone book. So how do they find us? In fact hardly anyone “let’s their fingers do the walking” these days. So where and when could one go to find you and learn how they could hear the Gospel? Do you advertise? Have a web site? A blog? Can I follow you on Twitter? Face Book? How does one find out where and when the Mass is celebrated? Word of mouth? Advertising? On your web site? Is it up to date? In a newspaper add? If no one tells them will they come?

Have you thought about putting parts of this weeks liturgy on your web site, in video? At least the Gospel and Homily. Remember on any given Sunday a large percentage of your parish doesn’t attend Mass

Article by Ron Lill

Roughly three-in-ten online Americans ages 25 to 34 tweet. Older adults are far less likely to be on Twitter, with roughly one-in-ten internet-using adults between the ages of 45 and 64 tweeting. The median age for a Twitter user is 31.
The Office for Research and Planning in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia has been posting “Tweets” on a Twitter page for a few months. It’s known as Philly Catholic and the response has been quite positive.

Anyone can follow the link twitter.com/PhillyCatholic and learn some of the many interesting facts about the Church in Philadelphia. Just take a look at what is being posted. I think you’ll be surprised at the great things our Philly Catholic brothers and sisters are doing. Some of the Tweets I’ve seen:

Requests for hospital chaplains — from religious and nonreligious patients and families — are growing as hospitals care for sick patients who are often grappling with questions about aggressive care and death. Chaplains also attribute it to the increase in Latino patients, many of whom are deeply religious.

WHAT THIS MEANS TO THE PARISH

Sudoku is all well and good, but nothing teases the brain better than the real deal: meaningful readings and discussion of the scripture challenges students to think.

• Learning may begin in the classroom but it doesn't end there. Older adults who engage in meaningful study of their faith, from special lectures to informal bull sessions, have more spring in their step and bring life to the parish.
